7. Geol. (Cf. 3.) A gradual movement of disintegrated rock due to atmospheric changes, water, etc.; the slow displacement of strata or the earth's crust by expansion or contraction, or under compressive strain; more explicitly continental, crust, tangential creep.

1903 T. M. Reade Evol. Earth Structure ii. 45 The tangential creep and ridging up. Ibid. ix. 134 The horizontal expansion..will produce, by small increments and minor alternations, a creep, ending in an anticlinal fold. 1904 tr. Suess' Face of Earth I. 115 Those cases of overthrusting which are distinguished from faults under the name of Wechsel or Schlächten in Germany, and known in England as creeps. 1906 Chamberlin & Salisbury Geol. III. 312 Continental creep along the steep slope between the continental platforms and the oceanic basins.

8. Of a bar of steel, etc.: A very slow increase in length under excessive stress. Cf. *Creep v. 8.

1924 F. C. Lea in Proc. Inst. Mech. Engin. II. 1066 At stresses slightly above this the creep was continuous and the bar broke. Ibid. 1072 It will thus stand a higher stress without creep. 1928 Daily Express 29 June 6 Investigations are being made into the 'creep' in metals.

9. The slip of the belt on the pulley drum, or wheel over which it runs.

Creep, v. Add:

4. e. Of salts in solution: To rise in crystals upon the sides of the containing vessel.

1900 Nature 4 Oct. 562/1 Dr. Tronton gave a short account of his experiments on the creeping of liquids, and on the surface tensions of mixtures. He has found that the tendency of certain liquids to creep up the sides of their containing vessels is due to such liquids being mixtures. 1901 W. R. Cooper Prim. Batteries 195 When evaporation of a salt takes place in a glass vessel, crystals form on the vessel near the surface of the solution; and..the crystals grow upwards and finally grow over the top of the vessel. This 'creeping', as it is termed, is avoided in Leclanché cells by dipping the tops of the glass pots into ozokerite or paraffin wax. 1911 T. Mather Ayrton's Pract. Electr. 194 Their compactness, portability, freedom from all creeping of the salts.

8. Also, to increase very gradually in length under excessive stress.

1899 J. A. Ewing Strength Mater. 24 When a load exceeding the elastic limit is applied the strain which occurs at once is followed by a continued 'creeping' or supplementary deformation. 1911 — in Encycl. Brit. XXV. 1014/1 The elastic limit is the point..at which a tendency to creep is first seen. 1924 F. C. Lea in Proc. Inst. Mech. Eng. II. 1053 The problem is to find the safe stress at which the material will not change form or creep. Ibid. 1072 At 11.40 a.m. on the 11th the specimen had crept 0·2 millimetre, but at 11.40 a.m. on the 14th the creeping had ceased.

10. Of soil, etc.: To be gradually moved or dislocated.

1843 J. Phillips in Rep. Brit. Assoc. (1844) 61 This seemed to be the result of a 'creeping' movement of the particles of rock along the planes of cleavage. 1855 — Man. Geol. 85 Thus the mica and chlorite which generally meet the surfaces of lamination, appear to have been shouldered about, without being fused, twisted in their structural planes, and subject to that curious minute folding which is often observed as one of the effects of cleavage structure in delicate and pliable shells in slates, for which the term 'creep' was used by the author in 1843.

11. Of a rubber tyre. (Cf. *Creep sb. 10.)

1903 Motoring Ann. 300 It is claimed for the Collier tyre that it cannot possibly creep. 1908 Westm. Gaz. 25 Feb. 4/2, I understand that they have a great tendency to creep.

1892 H. W. Hughes Coal-mining 383 No better appliance has been introduced for minimising the cost of conveying tubs about the heapstead than that known as the 'finger' or 'creeper' chain...It consists of an endless chain travelling under the tubs, provided at intervals with vertical projecting pieces of iron fastened to the links. 1894 Westm. Gaz. 16 Jan. 5/3 A creeper rope tied from bank to bank. 1909 Ibid. 30 Dec. 5/4 We finally managed to get another creeper bridge between the island and the opposite bank, and hauled the women and children to a place of safety.

Whenever this situation exists to an appreciable extent..we have what is called a disperse system or a dispersoid. Ibid., The degree of dispersion of a dispersed phase is usually defined as the ratio of its surface to its volume. 1919 E. -eer, suffix [1]. Add:

The spelling -eer, replacing the older -ier, became frequent in the early 17th century. Mountaineer and Waistcoateer (a prostitute) afford early instances, and are also exceptional examples of the use of this suffix. A few formations denote inanimate objects, as gazetteer (1704), muffineer (1806–7).

In the latter part of the 17th century gerundial and (to a less extent) participial formations on agent-nouns in -eer appeared, and increased in the course of the following century, as auctioneering (1733), buccaneering (1703), electioneering (1790), engineering (1720), parliamenteering (1711), privateering (1664), volunteering (1691). These, being formed directly on the sbs. in -eer, do not necessarily imply the existence of a corresponding infinitive or finite verbal form, though an early example actually appears in mutineered (1682). Some of these formations, e.g. parliamenteering, were in commoner use than the original sb.; occasionally, as in revolutioneering, no sb. exists, -eering itself being used as a suffix.

-eer, suffix [2], representing Du. -eren, ad. F. infinitive ending -er; as in domineer (Shakspere), ad. Du. †domineren, ad. F. dominer to DOMINATE; commandeer (1881), ad. Cape Du. commanderen, ad. F. commander to COMMAND.

Thomson, is opposite in iron to what it is in copper or zinc. 1894 Ibid. 563 Kerr's Effect. 1881 W. Roberts in *Proc. The action of an enzyme may be designated enzymosis, and the nature of the action may be spoken of as enzymic. 1890 A. S. Lea in Jrnl. Physiol. XI. 254 The word 'zymolysis' might be conveniently used to denote..the changes produced by the enzymes or unorganised ferments. 1898 J. R. Green in *Ann. 1908 H. DRIESCH Sci. & Philos. Organism I. 83 Though ectoderm and endoderm have their potencies equally distributed amongst their respective cells, they possess different potencies compared one with the other. And the same relation is found to hold for all cases of what we may call elementary organs: they are 'equipotential', as we may say, in themselves, but of different potencies compared with each other. 1909 J. W. JENKINSON Exper. Embryol. 282 This conception, of the absolute equipotentiality of the parts, as we have already had occasion to remark, is erroneous. 1920 L. DONCASTER Introd. Cytol. 118 It is maintained by Driesch and others that eggs of this type are equipotential systems, that is to say, they are not differentiated before fertilisation into regions of different potentiality, and any part of the egg is capable of giving rise to any part of the embryo.

Extinction. Add: 5. Petrography. (See quots.) So Extinguished a.

1882 Geikie Text-bk. Geol. 189 In searching for the crystallographic system to which a mineral in a microscopic slide should be referred, attention is given to the directions in which the mineral appears dark, in other words, to the directions of its extinction, between crossed Nicols. It is extinguished when two of its axes of elasticity for vibrations of light coincide with the principal sections of the two prisms. 1912 tr. Weinschenk's Petrogr. Meth. 67 Maximum brightness is obtained when the vibration directions of the crystal are at 45° to those of the nicols. It diminishes upon further rotation and passes gradually over into complete darkness when these directions are respectively parallel. This latter position is also called the position of extinction, and the vibration directions in the crystal, the extinction directions. Ibid. 71 Extinction is of especial importance in the investigation of cleavage pieces. Ibid. 70 Extinction Curve for Diopside. Ibid., In triclinic minerals the determination of the extinction angles is of value only when the orientation of the face upon which they are observed is accurately known. 1921 A. Holmes Petrogr. Meth. 126 When a transparent mineral fragment is rotated between crossed nicols various phenomena may be observed according to the nature of the mineral and the orientation of the fragment. If the object remains dark, and is therefore isotropic, the total extinction indicates an amorphous or cubic (isometric) mineral in an unstrained condition, or a basal section of a uniaxial mineral (tetragonal, hexagonal, or trigonal). Ibid., Except by rare coincidence in all sections of triclinic crystals, the extinction is neither straight nor symmetrical, but is symmetrically inclined to the edge, cleavage, or twin-direction which gives the crystallographic orientation. The angle between any such direction and the nearest extinction is the extinction-angle.

Tallness in the pea is a unit character, and is transmitted from one generation to another by the 'tall' factor in the gamete. 1910 DONCASTER Heredity 56 If the factor tallness is present it makes itself visible, and therefore the short peas in F_2 should contain no tall factor. Ibid. 136 In Mendelian inheritance, the hereditary determinant of a particular character is spoken of as the factor for that character. 1921 Conquest Sept. 491/3 Mendel..introduced the idea of germinal factors, which are to heredity what the atoms of Dalton were to chemistry. 1927 HALDANE & HUXLEY *Anim.
